Iraq Cleric Offers Truce Deal

Al-Sadr orders followers off the streets after heavy fighting

BAGHDAD | In a possible turning point in the recent upsurge in violence, Muqtada al-Sadr ordered his Shiite militiamen off the streets Sunday but called on the government to stop its raids against his followers.

The government welcomed the move, which followed intense negotiations by Shiite officials, including two lawmakers who reportedly traveled to Iran to ask religious authorities there to intervene.

Prime Minister Nouri al-Maliki, whose offensive that began Tuesday in the oil-rich southern city of Basra sparked the crisis, called al-Sadr's statement "a step in the right direction."

But fighting continued in the Basra area after the announcement. A U.S. airstrike killed 25 suspected militants after American ground forces came under heavy fire during a combat patrol in predominantly Shiite eastern Baghdad, where the fiercest clashes in the capital have occurred.

Al-Sadr

The anti-American cleric called for an end to the "armed presence" in Basra and other cities and urged followers "to cooperate with the government to achieve security."

Al-Sadr, however, also demanded that the Iraqi government stop "illegal and haphazard raids" and release security detainees who haven't been charged, two issues cited by his movement as reasons for fighting the government. (AP)

TOO MUCH BEER

Even So, Vomiting Followed

Police thought they had underage drinking on their hands when they interrupted a Wausau, Wis., party. But though they made dozens of teens take breath tests, none tested positive for alcohol. That's because the keg contained root beer. Dustin Zebro, 18, said he staged the party after some of his friends were suspended from sports because of pictures showing them drinking from red cups. "They assumed there was beer in the cups. We just wanted to have some root beer in red cups and just make it look like a party, but there actually wasn't any alcohol," he said. (AP)

ESCHATOLOGY

Living Body Declared Preferable to Dead

William Bowen woke up after a night of drinking with friends and realized he was inside a commercial trash-collection truck full of waste. The driver had just emptied a commercial trash bin into his truck and was about to activate its compactor when he heard Bowen screaming. Bowen told police he didn't recall how he ended up inside the trash bin. "I'm just glad it turned out the way it did," said Larry Green of the Rumpke waste disposal company in Muncie, Ind. "We didn't have a body that was dead; we had a body that was talking." (AP)

The Unity Argument

Pennsylvania Gov. Edward G. Rendell, whose state holds the nation's next primary, on April 22, implicitly criticized a key rationale of Sen. Barack Obama's presidential campaign, saying Sunday that it is not enough to be a unifying figure.

"I think the important thing to understand is who's got the best solutions for the problems, not just unification. That's great, but unification is not going to bring us health care," said Rendell, a Democrat and a supporter of Obama's opponent, Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Rendell said the Obama campaign's argument that he is winning the most votes and the most delegates is incredulous because it ignores the result of votes in Michigan and Florida.

"It's a disgrace that the Obama forces say, 'Well, he's won the popular vote, so he should be the nominee,'" Rendell said. "There are 10 states left."

Newest Cholesterol Drug Fails Test

Vytorin's effectiveness is doubted after study of buildup in arteries

CHICAGO | Leading doctors urged a return to older, tried-and-true treatments for high cholesterol after hearing full results Sunday of a failed trial of Vytorin.

Millions of Americans already take the drug or one of its components, Zetia. But doctors were stunned to learn that Vytorin failed to improve heart disease even though it worked as intended to reduce three key risk factors.

"People need to turn back to statins," said Yale University cardiologist Dr. Harlan Krumholz, referring to Lipitor, Crestor and other widely used brands. "We know that statins are good drugs. We know that they reduce risks."

The study was closely watched because Zetia and Vytorin have racked up $5 billion in sales despite limited proof of benefit. Two congressional panels launched probes into why it took drugmakers nearly two years after the study's completion to release results.

Results were published on the Internet by the New England Journal of Medicine.

Doctors have long focused on lowering LDL or bad cholesterol as a way to prevent heart disease. Statins like Merck & Co.'s Zocor, which recently came out in generic form, do this, as do niacin, fibrates and other medicines.

Vytorin, which came out in 2004, combines Zocor with Schering-Plough Corp.'s Zetia, which went on sale in 2002 and attacks cholesterol in a different way.

The study tested whether Vytorin was better than Zocor alone at limiting plaque buildup in the arteries of 720 people with super-high cholesterol because of a gene disorder.

The results show the drug had "no result — zilch. In no subgroup, in no segment, was there any added benefit" for reducing plaque, said Dr. John Kastelein, the Dutch scientist who led the study.

Woman Survives Cheetah Attack At Fla. Sanctuary

WELLINGTON, FLA. | The owner of a wildlife sanctuary was attacked by two cheetahs Saturday and hospitalized with about 40 puncture wounds to her extremities and back, authorities said.

Judy Berens was conducting an exhibition with two male cheetahs when one became distracted by a ball being bounced outside, the sheriff's office said. The cheetah moved toward the ball quickly and knocked her to the ground. The cheetah then pounced on her and began biting and clawing her, said Gabriella Ferraro, Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission spokeswoman. At some point, the other cheetah attacked, too. (AP)

'Killing Fields' Witness Dies

Journalist's escape from Khmer Rouge was featured in movie

NEW YORK | Dith Pran, the Cambodian-born journalist whose harrowing tale of enslavement and eventual escape from that country's murderous Khmer Rouge revolutionaries in 1979 became the subject of the award-winning film "The Killing Fields," died Sunday. He was 65.

Dith died at a New Jersey hospital Sunday morning of pancreatic cancer, according to Sydney Schanberg, his former colleague at the New York Times. Dith had been diagnosed almost three months ago.

Dith was working as an interpreter and assistant for Schanberg in Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, when the Vietnam War reached its chaotic end in April 1975 and both countries were taken over by communist forces.

Schanberg helped Dith's family get out but was forced to leave his friend behind after the capital fell; they were not reunited until Dith escaped four and a half years later. Eventually, Dith settled in the United States and went to work as a photographer for the Times.

It was Dith himself who coined the term "killing fields" for the horrifying clusters of corpses and skeletal remains of victims he encountered on his desperate journey to freedom.

After Dith moved to the U.S., he became a goodwill ambassador for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and founded the Dith Pran Holocaust Awareness Project, dedicated to educating people about the history of the Khmer Rouge regime.

He was "a journalist and hero," New York Times executive editor Bill Keller said in a letter Sunday. He added: "That last word is not one I use lightly." RICHARD PYLE (AP)

Dems Risk Angering Female Voters

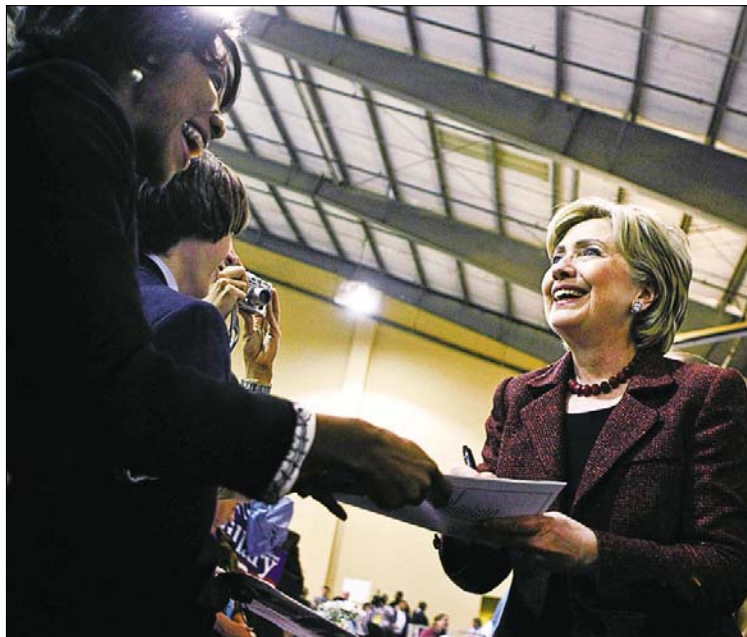

Demands for Clinton to end her candidacy may be seen as sexist

NEW ALBANY, IND. | Debra Starks has heard the calls for Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, D-N.Y., to quit the presidential race, and she's not happy about it.

The 53-year old Walmart clerk, so bedecked with Clinton campaign buttons most days that friends call her "Button Lady," thinks sexism is playing a role in efforts to push the New York senator from the race.

"The way I look at it, she's a strong woman, and she needs to stay in there. She needs to fight," Starks said.

Amid mounting calls from

Sen. Hillary Clinton told The Washington Post she will continue her run for the Democratic presidential nomination all the way to the party's convention in August.

top Democrats for Clinton to step aside and clear the path for rival Sen. Barack Obama, D-Ill., strategists are warning of damage to the party's chances in November if women sense a mostly male party establishment is unfairly muscling Clinton out of the race.

"Women will indeed be upset if it appears people are trying to push Hillary Clinton out of the way," said Carol Fowler, the South Carolina Democratic Party chair who is backing Obama. "If you are going to ask her to withdraw, you'd better be making a strong case for it — both to the candidate and the public."

Vermont Sen. Patrick Leahy last week became the first leading Democrat to openly call on Clinton to abandon her bid and back Obama, a sentiment shared by many activists worried that a drawn-out nominating contest bolsters Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz.

To be sure, Clinton campaign officials concede her path to winning the nomination is not at all clear.

She almost certainly will end the primary season trailing Obama in the popular vote and among pledged delegates. But Obama is unlikely to end the race with the 2,024 pledged delegates needed to win outright, either, meaning the nominee will be determined by roughly 800 superdelegates — elected officials and party insiders who can back whichever candidate they want.

Most observers believe the superdelegates are unlikely to risk an intraparty uproar by siding with Clinton if Obama maintains his lead among pledged delegates.

But Clinton advisers believe many superdelegates remain at least persuadable, due in no small part to the influence of women voters. BETH FOUHY (AP)

Nearly 11 years after the deaths of Princess Diana and her lover Dodi Fayed, testimony has ranged far and wide in an extraordinary coroner's inquest. Zimbabwe Election Results Delayed

Main opposition party claims lead despite lack of official tally

HARARE, ZIMBABWE | Zimbabwe's main opposition party claimed an early lead Sunday in elections, seeking to thwart any possible vote rigging by President Robert Mugabe amid an ominous silence from the Electoral Commission and the deployment of security forces.

But by sundown, frustrations grew. Riot police and other security forces were patrolling the capital's suburbs, according to independent election monitors.

In previous elections, partial results have been announced within hours of voting ending.

The head of the Pan-African Parliament observer mission said the delay was creating "anxiety," and warned of a scenario similar to that of Kenya, where delayed results from a disputed December 2007 election led to widespread violence.

Discontent with Mugabe has grown nationwide, and the election was seen as a challenge to his 28-year rule. Unemployment stands at 80 percent and inflation is at more than 100,000 percent.

"The Mugabe regime is a disgrace to the people of Zimbabwe and a disgrace to southern Africa and to the continent of Africa as whole," Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice said Sunday while in the Middle East for peace talks.

Opposition leader Morgan

Tsvangirai's Movement for Democratic Change party said he was leading the race with 67 percent of votes, basing its count on returns from 35 percent of polling stations.

Israel to Remove Some Roadblocks

Rice encourages new agreement between Israelis, Palestinians

JERUSALEM | In talks with U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice on Sunday, Israel pledged to remove some West Bank roadblocks as a start to "concrete steps" aimed at achieving a peace deal with the Palestinians this year.

Rice brought senior Israeli and Palestinian officials together and then announced that Israel will remove about 50 roadblocks and upgrade checkpoints to speed up the movement of Palestinians through the West Bank, while the Palestinians pledged to upgrade security.

Rice

'CONCRETE STEPS'

The steps agreed to by Israeli Defense Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian Prime Minister Salaam Fayyad include

- Removing 50 travel barriers in and around the Palestinian West Bank towns of Jenin, Tulkarem, Qalqiliya and Ramallah.
- Dismantling one permanent roadblock.
- Increasing the number of Palestinian businessmen allowed into Israel.
- Building new housing for Palestinians in 25 villages. (AP)

The Israelis also will give Palestinians more security responsibility in the town of Jenin.

The Israelis also pledged to increase the number of travel and work permits for Palestinians and to support economic projects in Palestinian towns.

In return, the Palestinians promised to improve policing of Jenin "to provide law and order, and work to prevent terror," according to a State Department statement.

Rice said the moves "constitute a very good start to improving" a Palestinian economy crippled by the Israeli restrictions.

Israeli Defense Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian Prime Minister Salaam Fayyad agreed to what the U.S. termed "concrete steps" at a joint meeting with Rice.

"We've been told that this is going to start and, hopefully even be completed, in a relatively short period of time," Rice said. "I am expecting it to happen very, very soon."

Samir Abdullah, the Palestinian planning minister, said he welcomed any improvement, but called Israel's moves "too little, too late."

Olympic Torch Handed Off

Flame starts journey from Greece to China despite Tibet activists

ATHENS, GREECE | Chinese spectators cheered Sunday as Greece handed off the Olympic flame for its journey to Beijing and relay through 20 countries. But protesters brandishing Tibetan flags stole the limelight.

About two dozen activists chanted "Save Tibet!" and unfurled a banner reading "Stop Genocide in Tibet" before police intervened, detaining 21 protesters outside the Panathenian Stadium. Most were later freed.

A police cordon prevented the demonstrators from disrupting the final leg of Greece's relay from the Acropolis to the marble stadium, the venue of the first modern Olympics in 1896.

About 7,000 Greek and Chinese spectators cheered as Greek triple jumper Hrysopigi Devetzi carried the torch into the stadium.

The president of the Hellenic Olympic Committee, Minos Kyriakou, delivered the flame to chief Beijing organizer Liu Qi.

The torch later left Athens on a specially equipped Air China flight expected to arrive in Beijing on Monday.

Qi promised a "grand welcoming ceremony" in Tiananmen Square, where the government has increased security. The torch will then travel through 20 countries before returning to mainland China.

Kyriakou appealed for respect for a "timeless symbol which stirs admiration, pride and faith" in the Olympics.

The flame goes Tuesday to Almaty, Kazakhstan, and then on to Istanbul, Turkey, and St. Petersburg, Russia. NICHOLAS PAPHITIS (AP)

Swedes Tighten Rules To Limit Iraqi Refugees

Asylum-seekers from war-torn nation must show they fled violence

SOLLENTUNA, SWEDEN | The fear of being sent back to Baghdad has taken its toll on Mustafa Aziz Alwi.

He says he cannot sleep and has lost about 20 pounds since his claim for asylum in Sweden was rejected in January.

"They told me it's because it's calmer in Iraq now. ... But they don't know that it's death there," said Aziz Alwi, 25, wiping away tears in an interview at his cousin's apartment in Sollentuna.

Had his case been decided a year earlier, he would probably already hold a residence permit.

Sweden has given shelter to about 100,000 Iraqis, 40,000 of them since the U.S.-led invasion in 2003. That's far more than any other Western country, including the U.S., which admitted just over Iraqi citizen Mustafa Aziz Alwi sought asylum in Sweden but was rejected.

1,600 Iraqi refugees in the 2007 fiscal year.

Sweden has gradually tightened its asylum rules, worried that its generous welfare system can't cope. The government sees the surge of newcomers as out of control and has appealed to fellow European Union states to share the burden.

Sweden's turning point came last July when the Migration Board said the situation in Iraq could not be described as an armed conflict.

As a result, asylum-seekers now must show that they have fled specific threats of violence; general turmoil is no longer sufficient grounds.

At 59, NATO Faces Identity Crisis

Alliance members to discuss Afghanistan, Russia at gathering

In Afghanistan, it is battling al-Qaeda and Taliban. In newly independent Kosovo, it's up against Serbian protesters armed with fire-bombs and grenades. And behind the scenes, it is helping to quell the violence in Iraq and to track down suspected war criminals in Bosnia.

NATO, its chief insists, has no ambitions to become a "global policeman." But the military alliance born of the Cold War continues to grow and face new challenges.

At a summit Wednesday through Friday in Romania, President Bush and the leaders of NATO's other 25 countries will discuss how to mobilize more troops to turn the tide in Afghanistan, and whether to get bigger and tougher at the risk of alienating Russia.

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization, which turns 60 next year, faces a mid-life crisis as it debates whether a new vision and direction are needed in a world transformed since the Cold War that was the alliance's original raison d'être.

“We need to answer the question: What kind of NATO do we want for the years to come?”

JAAP DE HOOP SCHEFFER,
NATO SECRETARY GENERAL

Its membership has nearly doubled since the Berlin Wall came down, and the venue of the summit — the cavernous “People's House” in Bucharest built by Nicolae Ceausescu, Romania's last communist dictator — is a powerful symbol of a world upended.

This week's gathering could be a platform for controversy and widen the Europe-North America divide, says Marek Swierczynski, a commentator for the Atlantic Community, a Berlin-based forum on security and defense issues.

NATO Secretary General Jaap de Hoop Scheffer recently said that the 26-nation alliance is stretched thin.

“The burdens on NATO are greater today than ever before, and this makes it ever more urgent that we have a clear strategic vision,” he said. “We need to answer the question: What kind of NATO do we want for the years to come?”

National Harbor Hotel Set to Open

$870M development project in Pr. George's will debut Tuesday

OXON HILL, MD. | Workers have been putting the finishing touches on the centerpiece of the sprawling National Harbor development ahead of Tuesday's opening.

The Gaylord National Resort and Convention Center is billed as the largest non-casino hotel and convention center on the East Coast. The $870 million building has an 18-story atrium wrapped in glass and steel overlooking the Potomac River. It will serve as the anchor for National Harbor, which will also feature five other hotels, a marina, stores, offices, restaurants, entertainment venues and condominiums.

As part of the final preparations, executive chef Holger Frohlich recently supervised the preparation of a buffet menu for banquets. Inside the hotel's nightclub, electricians wired lights into a glass wall.

They will flash red, yellow, green and blue and will be bright enough to be seen from the Wilson Bridge, three miles away.

Larger than any hotel in Washington, the resort has 2,000 rooms, 110 suites and 300 VIP rooms. It features marble from Italy, Swarovski crystals, dozens of live trees and a fountain that shoots water 10 stories high.

The upscale shops inside the complex are built in styles reflecting regional architecture, including a Virginia farmhouse and a Georgetown rowhouse. The seven eateries include one with floors made with wood from old barns in the region.

National Harbor's developer, the Peterson Cos., is touting the project as a destination for local residents, businesspeople and tourists. "This is going to change Prince George's County," said David Byrd, the county's deputy chief administrative officer for economic development. "It's going to change the perception of the county." Public Gets 1 Chance to See Pope

Security concerns limit amount of interaction for Pope Benedict XVI

WASHINGTON | When Pope Benedict XVI comes to Washington next month, things will be much different from the last time D.C. had a papal visit.

That was October 1979. Pope John Paul II emerged from a car's sunroof, waving and smiling to thousands of cheering onlookers who lined Washington streets and even climbed trees for a glimpse of the Roman Catholic leader.

Times have changed, particularly in regards to security. Benedict has just one public event in the nation's capital — a Mass for ticket-holders only at Nationals Park on April 17. He will travel through the city in a closed car or in the popemobile.

Susan Gibbs of the Archdiocese of Washington says the arrangements reflect the times we live in. (AP)

Catania to Push Health Care Plan For Uninsured

WASHINGTON | A D.C. Council member is proposing a plan to offer subsidized health care coverage to uninsured residents. The program would be funded by new taxes on health companies and cigarettes.

David Catania says he'll introduce legislation this week aimed at helping about 25,000 uninsured residents who are not eligible for Medicaid programs or another D.C. program.

Residents would pay monthly premiums of $20 or $100, depending on their incomes. The city would subsidize about $21 million of the cost, with CareFirst BlueCross BlueShield contributing $5 million and making their providers available.

Catania says the plan would require all residents to obtain health insurance. Those without any other coverage would have until January 2010 to enroll in the new program or risk a $250 fine. (AP)

'Dollar Bill' Is America's Moneymaker

Md. resident handled major redesign of U.S. $10s, $20s and $50s

SEVERNA PARK, MD. | No one makes more money than Bill Krawczewicz. But the Severna Park resident won't ever give Bill Gates a run for his money because, sadly, the riches aren't his own.

Krawczewicz is a bank note designer, one of only three in the country, at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington, D.C.

If you'd like to view his handiwork, just take out your wallet and examine the $10s, $20s and $50s inside. He worked on the redesign of all three bills.

He didn't draw the pictures of Hamilton, Jackson and Grant on the notes, but he did handle the currency's color and layout, as well as the design of the icons of freedom. Some friends call him "Dollar Bill."

"I feel like it's a privilege to do this," he said. "It's an honor to represent the country in this way. I feel like I'm doing my part to serve the country."

When he first tells people what he does, though, he said there are typically two reactions: They either don't believe him, or they want free samples. Krawczewicz isn't bothered if they doubt him, and, no, there aren't any handouts.

Consider this: The job is so involved that the apprenticeship to become a full-fledged bank note designer lasts seven years.

Besides bank notes, he's designed the Maryland quarter, President Bush's official medal, the James Madison silver dollar and three Olympic coins for the summer games in Atlanta in 1996. "I've always liked money," he said with a chuckle. "[But] I have more of an understanding of all the labor that goes into it." (AP)

Shh — Babies Sleeping

Sound level indicators help control neonatal intensive care units

KEEP QUIET | Warning lights hover over the snoozing patients in Indianapolis' Riley Hospital for Children's neonatal intensive care unit, ready to flash whenever sound levels creep beyond normal conversation.

As decibels rise, the colors on the new monitoring system change from green to yellow to red, hushing chatty parents or doctors so the babies get the rest they need to develop.

Noise louder than roughly the level of conversation can cause premature or sick babies' hearts to beat too fast or too slowly, said Dr. William Engle, a neonatologist at Riley. And interfering with babies' vital signs or sleep can slow development and healing because their bodies do most of that work while they sleep.

"The function of babies is to grow and develop, and in between they eat," he said.

A unit displays a visual representation of measured sound levels. As decibels rise, the colors change from green to yellow to red, hushing chatty parents or doctors.

Preemies also need quiet so they can learn their mother's voice and their brains can figure out how to process sound, things that normally happen in the last trimester before birth.

Inventor Chris Smith has sold his Sonicu system to several Indiana hospitals and wants to expand nationally.

The latest version of Sonicu can feed a stream of both sound and light data digitally to a computer. It can quickly dim the lighting in a room that gets too noisy.

It also can make lighting mimic the sun by brightening toward noon and then fading, which also helps babies sleep well.

A question on spam filters. On my Windows machine, I just changed from Norton Internet/Antivirus to the free McAfee offered by Comcast. It doesn't have a spam filter. I also have a recently acquired MacBook pro, and I'm using Mac Mail. It does not have a spam filter, either. They both have junk filters which do not seem to work quite as well as Norton's spam filter. Can you recommend spam filters for these machines?

Spam filters ARE junk filters. Different words, same meaning. You should give the Mac filter some time — it gets better as you train it, making messages "junk" or "not junk." In Windows, I'm going to guess that you're using Outlook Express. My advice there is to get rid of that application. It's horribly out of date and defenseless against spam. Use Microsoft's free Windows Live Mail or Mozilla Thunderbird, both of which include spam filters.

Is the PDA market dead? Did Palm kill it by assuming dominance and then refusing to innovate in any way for years? Any chance Apple will save it? I was a Palm user for years, but eventually just switched back to paper.

The PDA — aka, handheld organizer — market is almost dead. In almost every case, you're better off getting a smartphone that runs a handheld operating system (Palm OS, Windows Mobile, BlackBerry, Symbian, iPhone), since that will both put your complete address book behind the phone and give you good Web access.

I saw a comment on a chat board that Apple's new Time Capsule wasn't compatible with AppleTV? That seems crazy. Have you heard anything about this?

Huh? Time Capsule is a networked backup device. Apple TV is a networked media receiver. The two don't have any functions in common, so they can't be compatible or incompatible. They're just two different things you can have networked to a Mac.

Do you suspect that Pioneer is actually going to be leaving the plasma business, or is it just going to use another company to produce its panels? And if the latter, do you think this will affect the quality of its industry-leading plasmas?

The story I heard was that Pioneer was going to stop making their own plasma TVs, not that they'd exit the biz entirely. But even that seems fishy to me: How can you outsource your manufacturing AFTER launching an ad campaign about how your plasma TVs are so far superior to every other brand of TV on this particular planet?

The PDA — aka, hand-held organizer — market is almost dead.

Apple question for you. I am thinking of switching to a Mac, but I saw somewhere that Mac users running Apple OS can't view Windows media files online. Is that correct? Did I just read it wrong? Exactly what media content on a PC would I have trouble viewing on a Mac?

It's wrong. The only kind of Windows Media files that you can't view on a Mac — which, not to bring up an old rant, IS NOT AN ACRONYM — are those locked with Microsoft's "digital rights management" software. So, you can't, for instance, watch Amazon Unbox movies in Mac OS X.

I'm probably going to switch to the Verizon Fios bundle for TV-Internet-phone from DSL-TiVo, (already have Verizon phone). For the Internet switch, are there any major benefits to switching to Verizon e-mail over a Web-based e-mail such as Gmail? I'm already aware of the TV-TiVo differences.

Verizon's mail — like most Internet providers — runs on POP, so it will be more awkward to access it remotely. I'd stick with Gmail if you're happy with that.

Five Burning QUESTIONS

1 Is this Ryan Zimmerman's year?

Third baseman Ryan Zimmerman has had two solid seasons (44 homers, 201 RBI in 2006 and 2007) and has already justified the No. 1 pick the Nationals spent on him. He's already the face of the franchise. The next step is becoming an All-Star level player. A lot of that will depend on the protection Washington gives him in the order.

2 Will the new outfielders deliver more offense?

Lastings Milledge and Elijah Dukes start off the season in center and left field, respectively, after being cast off by their former organizations in the offseason. Add in the powerful Willy Mo Pena (currently on the DL), and Washington has a lot more power than it did in past seasons.

3 Does the bullpen have an encore performance?

The rock of the team last season, the relievers figure to get plenty of work with the starting rotation again being a weak point. Closer Chad Cordero (37 saves in '07) is back to finish off games and Jon Rauch has posted back-to-back 80-plus outing seasons with sub-4.00 ERAs.

4 What will the starters bring to the mound?

When it comes to the rotation, even the question marks have question marks. Shawn Hill looks great when he's not hurt (which is rare), and Jason Bergmann looks good when he was healthy, too. Journeymen Odalis Perez and Tim Redding will also get a chance to carve a niche for themselves, while Matt Chico (7-9, 4.63) returns. There is stable of young pitchers in the minors that could be called upon.

5 Who's really on first?

Nick Johnson appears to have won the job, but insurance policy-turned-All-Star Dmitri Young should be a reliable bat off the bench until either he's traded or the oft-injured Johnson gets hurt again. ERIC BRANDNER

"I'm just happy to be here and see this and be a part of history," said Eric, visiting from Houston.

Eunice, of Port Tobacco, Md., said their visit to the park at its grand unveiling was more than just a chance to see history. They were there for her father, Charles Green, who couldn't be there.

"My dad loved baseball, and he passed away in 2006," she said. "I said, you know, just to honor him, to come to this park on Opening Day it's a tribute to him." DEREK TURNER

Showing off the AL East's Other Side

ORIOLES | What better way to start the baseball season than with a clash between a couple of evenly matched rivals in the AL East?

No, not the Yankees and Red Sox, but Baltimore and Tampa Bay.

Since entering the major leagues in 1998, Tampa Bay has finished one notch behind Baltimore for 10 years running. It's not a source of pride for the Orioles, but rather an indictment of Tampa Bay, which ended up in the cellar in nine of those 10 years.

Things could be different this season. The newly named Rays are ready to cash in on years of rebuilding, and the Orioles are launching a rebirth of their own. Although the progress of each team won't be evident for months, a hint of what lies ahead could be revealed Monday when Baltimore and Tampa Bay meet in the 2008 season opener.

The Orioles will be without shortstop Miguel Tejada and left-hander Erik Bedard. Luis Hernandez will start at shortstop and the starting pitcher will be Jeremy Guthrie, who has a grand total of seven career wins.

The Orioles have been picked by several publications to finish last, a fate they last experienced in 1988 when they opened with 21 straight defeats and went 54-107. But no one in the clubhouse is conceding anything, at least not before they've played a game.

Is 100th Time the Charm for Cubs?

Curses! Fans remain hopeful after suffering for a century at Wrigley

BASEBALL | One hundred years between your last World Series title and now isn't a slump, it's a century. That's 14 years longer than long-suffering Boston Red Sox fans had to wait, a dozen more than the hated crosstown White Sox endured, and still 40 clear of the Cleveland Indians.

Come Opening Day, more than 41,000 fans wearing Cubbie blue will hope against hope that this really is the year. It's a small wonder, then, that Cubs manager Lou Piniella welcomed his 2008 team to spring training this way: "Don't put the load of 99 years of not winning on you. Worry about this year only."

Of course, Piniella wasn't around when the franchise stood on the threshold of history, only to be cursed by a goat or crossed by a black cat.

Following back-to-back World

WHOLE LOT OF ANGST: Cubs manager Lou Piniella embraces Alfonso Soriano. Piniella told the team to forget about Chicago's 99 years of futility entering 2008.

Series wins in 1907-08, they returned to the Fall Classic seven more times through 1945 and lost every one. They haven't been back since. One thing most of the faithful still haven't figured out is why.

It's Wrigley Field. By the time William Wrigley consolidated control of the team and stadium, he already subscribed to a strategy that would hamstring the Cubs down through the decades.

You can't beat fun at the old ballpark, he said, as long as you don't waste too much time worrying about what was happening on the field. Charles W. Murphy, the Cubs president, summed it up in perhaps the team's original curse: "Rome was not built in a day, and it takes time, even in Chicago, to get ready for a World Series." JIM LITKE (AP)

NCAA TOURNEY | And then there were ones.

Four No. 1's, that is.

Kansas wore down Stephen Curry and plucky upstart Davidson with its size and strength, holding on for a 59-57 victory Sunday that put all four No. 1 seeds into the Final Four for the first time.

After Kansas' Sherron Collins missed with 19 seconds left, the 10th-seeded Wildcats got one last chance. Curry was double-teamed, could not get off a shot and forced to pass to Jason Richards, whose 25-footer from the top of the key thudded off the backboard.

Richards dropped to his back at midcourt while the Jayhawks celebrated with a measure of relief.

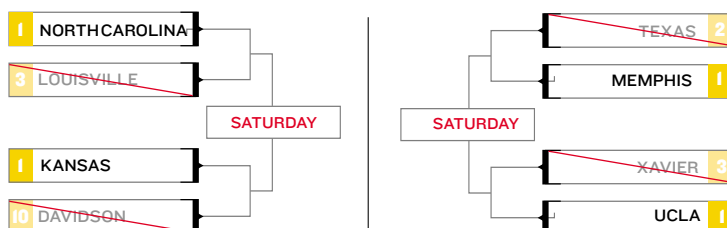

Kansas moved on to play over-all No. 1 seed North Carolina on Saturday, and UCLA and Memphis will round out the party at the Alamodome.

The win also rids Bill Self of that dreaded "best coach never to make a Final Four" label. Self had fallen short with three different schools, including last year's edition of the Jayhawks. But this year's bunch had too much talent, depth and experience to be denied. Brandon Rush scored eight of his 12 points in the second half, and Sasha Kaun came up with big baskets down the stretch whenever the Jayhawks needed them as Kansas ended the feel-good story of the tournament. Memphis Is Smelling Like a Rose

Freshman point guard stars in rout of Texas to reach the Final Four

NCAA TOURNEY | John Calipari has a good reason for calling his Memphis Tigers a "Dream Team" — a kid from Chicago who wears No. 23 and makes plays that bring fans out of their seats.

With freshman Derrick Rose soaring and scoring, Memphis ended two years of regional final failure and routed Texas 85-67 Sunday to reach the Final Four. The victory backed up the Tigers' season-long reign near the top of the poll and made them the third No. 1 seed headed to San Antonio.

Rose had 21 points, nine assists and six rebounds, leading the Tigers (37-1) into a national semifinal Saturday against a UCLA team making its third straight Final Four appearance.

Memphis and UCLA met in the regional finals two years ago and in the 1973 title game, with the Bruins winning both.

Rose and his teammates already are in elite company. Their 37th win matched an NCAA Division I record held by four other teams, and it was their 103rd victory over the last three seasons, the second-best run by any program. JAIME ARON (AP)

Carefree Terps Reliving 'Happy Days'

Top-seeded Maryland resembles group that won title 2 years ago

TERPS WOMEN HOOPS | For Maryland, "Happy Days" are here again.

The top-seeded Terrapins cut loose against No. 4 seed Vanderbilt on Saturday night in the regional semifinals. Gone was the tentativeness and trepidation that marked their first two NCAA tournament games. They were back to being the light-hearted, carefree bunch that won a national title two years ago.

Perhaps posing for pictures with Henry Winkler, Don Most and Cindy Williams is what led to Maryland's new-found exuberance. Or more likely the Terrapins (33-3) new-found exuberance is due to the relief of are relieved to be playing in the Spokane Region final against Stanford after unexpectedly stumbling in the second round last year.

No one seemed to make a more of an effort to lighten the mood Saturday night than Kristi Toliver. The junior point guard was zipping passes to open players and making sure everybody was in the right places all the while flashing a big grin. "That was something I consciously wanted to do," Toliver said. "I wanted to smile for 40 minutes."

A victory Monday night moves Maryland into the Final Four for the second time in three years, but standing in the Terps' way is a motivated Stanford team. But the Terrapins have been recalling lately how much fun it was for them two years ago when they skipped through their bracket to the national title game, unfettered by expectations that have weighed them down since.

THIN LINE BETWEEN FUNNY AND OFFENSIVE: The questions remains: Will Mike Myers cross the line as "The Love Guru"?

Great Success?

'Borat' and now 'Love Guru' raise questions of cultural sensitivity

WAWAWEWA! | As the people of Kazakhstan know all too well, mockery of culture and religion seems to be kosher in Hollywood, under the following conditions:

The humor must be so over-the-top, so beyond reality, that it could never be misconstrued as mean-spirited. That, and the targeted groups cannot be large enough, loud enough or organized enough so that their hurt feelings make an impact at the box office.

Just ask Borat. Though Kazakhs complained that their country and customs were grossly misrepresented in "Borat: Cultural Learnings of America for Make Benefit Glorious Nation of Kazakhstan," the film was a $128 million domestic success.

In the context of Sacha Baron Cohen's uncomfortable in-character interactions with unwitting Americans, Mike Myers' parody of another cultural minority in the U.S. — as the oversexed, overly ambitious, American-born spiritual leader in the summer comedy "The Love Guru" — would hardly seem cause for complaint.

Myers' character is an amalgamation of Eastern-style spiritual movements, never making reference to any particular religion. And yet the guru Pitka — billed as "the second best guru in India" — draws a distinct picture.

He wears long hair, a long beard and a flowing caftan. "Prepare to get your enlightenment freak on," Pitka tells visitors to his MySpace page, where he blends real information — such as the Sanskrit origins of the word "guru" — with silliness.

Pitka identifies himself as "a spiritual teacher affiliated with no one faith" and has the same crass-and-goofy charm as Myers' Austin Powers and "Wayne's World" characters. And the movie's plot — he heads West when he's offered $2 million to heal a hockey star's romance so the team can win the Stanley Cup — is harmless enough.

Still, weeks before the movie is even ready for screening, some in the Hindu community feel that "The Love Guru" has the potential to ridicule elements of their religion.

Rajan Zed, a self-described Hindu leader from Nevada, demanded that Paramount Pictures screen the film for members of the Hindu community before it is released in June.

"Love Guru," which is not yet complete, is a satire created in the same spirit as Austin Powers," Paramount said in a statement, noting that the film features spiritual teacher Deepak Chopra and Hindu actor Manu Narayan. "It is our full intention to screen the film for Rajan Zed and other Hindu leaders once it is ready." SANDY COHEN (AP)

Allende's Uninhibited Truth

The deeply personal proves powerful in 'The Sum of Our Days'

BOOK | In "The Sum of Our Days" (Harper Collins, 320 pages, $26.95), Isabel Allende's central characters are often defiant women who expect no favors from life. They are not damsels in distress but Amazons who slay their own dragons, Allende points out in her new memoir.

In "The Sum of Our Days," Allende takes her readers by the hand and tells them of her own battles, bringing them into the turbulent lives of her "clan," as Allende refers to her relatives and close friends.

Here we see why Allende is drawn to telling stories of gutsy women. Life has forced the Peruvian-born author, who was raised in Chile, to slay her share of dragons — from the pain of losing a daughter to the sleepless nights spent worrying about her next book.

ERIC RISBERG/AP

Isabel Allende lets the world into her inner circle and her intimate suffering.

"The Sum of Our Days" is a sequel to "Paula," the gut-wrenching memoir Allende wrote as a letter to her daughter as she lay in a coma. It is also written as a letter meant to update Paula on what's been happening in the world since her untimely death in 1992.

The tone, reminiscent of conversations between good friends during a long walk, or exchanges over tea late at night, is intimate and raw, and so are the stories Allende tells.

Back to The Tour Of '69

Simon & Garfunkel's new live recording is almost 40 years old

MUSIC | "Live 1969" from Simon & Garfunkel can be considered better late than never for a couple reasons. One is that these songs capture folk's most successful pair on their final tour before a bitter split. The other is that, almost 40 years later, there's finally a satisfying concert document of the duo, which shows them at the height of their powers and offers — by drawing from a half-dozen shows, with and without top-notch accompaniment — the best-rounded selection of S&G concert material available (legally, at least).

GLORY DAYS: "Live 1969" captures a shining moment in the esteemed duo's career.

Part of that success owes to the inclusion of the title track from "Bridge Over Troubled Water," which hadn't been released at the time of this autumn tour. This take, presented by Garfunkel solo, should generate as many goose bumps as the studio version, and it's joined by renditions of hits such as "The Boxer," "Homeward Bound" and "Scarborough Fair/Canticle," which put the focus on Simon's underrated guitar fingerpicking and the pair's one-of-a-kind harmonic blend.

The disc ends with Simon's "Kathy's Song," one of his greatest, if less-remarked, compositions. It's an appropriately wistful close to this document of a duo in its twilight, but "Live 1969" offers a lovely postscript to an untimely end. DAN LEROY

Foe of the Devil

Lifetime chronicles the draining pursuit of a driven detective

DEDICATION | The Lifetime Movie Network has picked a darkly compelling subject for its first original miniseries: the story of the Green River serial killer, who preyed on women in the Seattle area in the 1980s and '90s.

"The Capture of the Green River Killer," which aired last night and airs tonight (8 p.m.), stars Tom Cavanagh ("Ed") as Dave Reichert, the police detective (later sheriff and now congressman) who became obsessed with cracking the case.

LIFETIME VIA AP

LONG ROAD: Reichert spent 20 years bringing the Green River killer to justice.

Reichert detailed the saga in his book, "Chasing the Devil," on which the miniseries is based. It tracks unhappy teenager Helen, played by Amy Davidson, as her fate becomes intertwined with the killer who targets runaways and prostitutes.

Meanwhile, Reichert is following every lead and trying every approach, including a heart-to-heart with convicted serial killer Ted Bundy (James Marsters, "Buffy the Vampire Slayer"). Reichert slogs through turf battles, public criticism and false confessions.

The investigation took nearly 20 years but finally pinpointed the man who was linked by DNA and fiber evidence to the crimes and confessed to taking the lives of 48 women. LYNN ELBER (AP)

Bag the Check

Business

Travelers avoid some airport confusion by shipping their luggage

On a recent trip to Egypt, the coffee table books, pottery and other gifts Lorna Gladstone collected might have turned into a nightmare at the airport baggage check-in.

So, she packed her belongings into four suitcases and left them with the hotel concierge to ship home through a service called Luggage Free.

"I can go through security with my handbag and my book," said Gladstone, a retired resident of McLean, Va., who uses the service whenever she travels.

As struggling airlines add extra-luggage fees and travelers worry about growing security restrictions, services like Luggage Forward and Luggage Free have emerged as ways to bypass the hassles of checking bags.

While typically seen as a luxury, more Americans are using such options for run-of-the-mill trips. Others are simply mailing bags themselves, using the U.S. Postal Service, FedEx Corp. or UPS Inc.

The idea behind the luggage delivery services is to make traveling as headache-free as possible.

Customers load up their suitcases as usual, with no special packaging needed. Shipping slips for luggage are mailed to them. A pickup time is scheduled, usually for a two-hour window. If the bags are being sent to a hotel, the concierge will typically call customers to let them know their belongings have arrived.

Rates vary depending on the weight, distance and speed of the delivery. For example, sending a large bag (65 pounds) from New York City to San Francisco with a pickup date in five days would cost $149 through Luggage Forward.

To expand its services among everyday travelers, Luggage Forward last year introduced a seven-day "economy" option that typically costs less than $100 for a bag one way.

Such bookings now account for about half the company's domestic shipments.

Since Luggage Forward was established three years ago, sales have grown 300 percent each year, said Zeke Adkins, co-founder of the Boston-based company.

Luggage Free, based in New York City, is seeing similar growth. The number of bags the company shipped has doubled each year since 2004, with shipments reaching about 40,000 last year.

It's no surprise the companies sprang up in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 attacks, when tightened restrictions triggered confusion at airports across the country.

"Checking in became a whole different ballgame. And it's only gotten worse. There's this constant confusion over what you can carry on. People are realizing it's just easier to send it ahead," said Jeff Boyd,

AIRPORT WOES

U.S. travelers are subject to growing piles of lost and damaged baggage:

- In 2002, airlines lost 3.84 bags for every 1,000 fliers, according to the Department of Transportation.
- In 2007, airlines lost seven bags for every 1,000 passengers.
- The Transportation Security Administration estimates that for each of its employees who touches a bag, six to 10 airline or airport employees and contractors touch the same bag — increasing the chances of loss or theft. (AP) president of Luggage Free, which was founded in 2003.

For many seasoned travelers, shipping clothes is nothing new. There's no way to tell whether their ranks have grown, however, since FedEx and UPS do not track how much of their business is generated by such individuals.

The companies emphasize pleasant and easy service.

Callers to Luggage Free are greeted on the first or second ring by another human, rather than an automated system.

Still, the price can add up for a big order. When Adam Kolodny took his wife and four children on a ski trip to Colorado, it cost him $1,200 to ship eight bags of ski equipment and baggage round-trip through Luggage Forward. But compared to the mess it would have caused at the airport, the price was worth it, said Kolodny, 45, of Great Neck, N.Y.

"Between the overhead compartments being so full, stuff getting lost, the restrictions, it's starting to work out that we may start shipping all our stuff all the time," he said. CANDICE CHOI (AP)

The Kosher Consumers

Food

Foods prepared under Jewish dietary laws are gaining popularity

Keeping kosher is a lot easier than it used to be.

It's not that the Jewish dietary laws have changed. Pork and shellfish remain verboten, while meat and dairy — and the utensils that touch them — still must be kept strictly segregated.

Rather, thanks to recent dramatic growth of the kosher foods industry, consumers who follow these religious strictures now can dine on an array of products — about 102,000 items — that observant Jews just a generation ago would have marveled at.

Today, packages of everything from Oreos to beef jerky are marked with the kosher symbol, an indication that the food was prepared under a rabbi's supervision and according to Jewish laws that govern such procedures as how to slaughter animals.

"This has become a constituency that no longer needs to settle for whatever it is they can get," says Jack Brach, owner of Brach's, a 25,000-item all-kosher supermarket in Lawrence, N.Y.

A growing number of companies are willing to adhere to kosher regulations and pay for the rabbinical supervision required for the production of kosher foods.

Last year alone, about 2,500 new products were certified kosher. Meanwhile, grocers nationwide are adding or expanding kosher aisles. Some chains even have opened small kosher stores within larger mainstream supermarkets.

"This has become a constituency that no longer needs to settle for whatever it is they can get."

JACK BRACH, KOSHER MARKET OWNER

Many Shop Rite and SuperValu stores, for example, offer entire kosher bakeries, delis, freezer sections and even sushi bars.

With good reason. In 2005, the kosher foods niche grew 15 percent to become an $11.5 billion industry, according to Lubicom Marketing Consulting, a market research firm and publisher of industry newsletter Kosher Today.

And kosher certifying agencies are scrambling to keep up. The nation's largest, the Orthodox Union, for example, has gone from overseeing production at 400 factories in 1980 to more than 7,000 in more than 80 countries today. One of the biggest areas of growth has been China, which produces many foods and ingredients for export to the U.S. market.

Part of the reason for the growth is that traditionally kosher producers, such as Manischewitz and Flaum Appetizing, have been expanding their offerings in efforts to appeal to a more diverse and sophisticated clientele.

More significantly, a surprising number of mainstream products — from Coke to Kraft's Philadelphia cream cheese — are certified kosher. Many consumers probably don't even realize they are buying kosher products.

In fact, almost half of all packaged food produced in the U.S. is kosher, says Menachem Lubinsky, chief executive of Lubicom Marketing. "Most major brands are already kosher," he says.

Who's eating all this kosher food? Not just Jews.

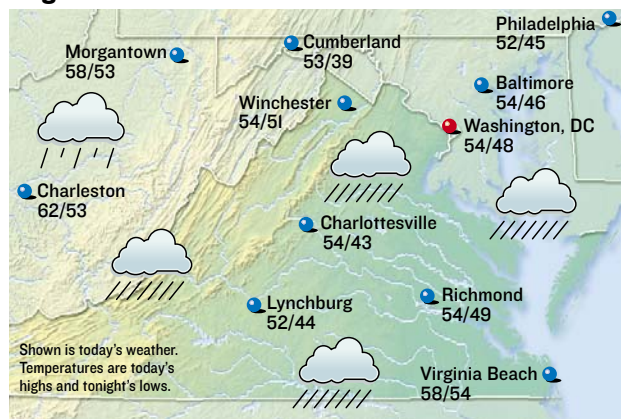

Kosher benefits from a positive image. More than half of people who seek out kosher foods do so because they believe kosher foods are healthier and safer than non-kosher items, according to a 2005 poll by market research firm Mintel.

And because kosher foods are clearly labeled as "meat," "dairy" or "pareve" (meaning the item contains neither meat nor dairy), vegetarians, vegans and those with dairy intolerances also are drawn to kosher products. JULIE WIENER (AP)

outFASHION FORWARD:

For his fall 2008 line, Kenneth Cole continues to stick with chic, sleek and urban trends. Yet this time around, he has also launched an "Awareness" campaign. The goal is to bring more attention to issues such as same-sex marriage, global warming and AIDS research.

Kenneth Cares

The designer's fall collection focuses on helping humanity

Characteristically sleek clothing for your average modern urban dweller is what Kenneth Cole excels in, and his fall 2008 clothing and accessories collections for men and women proved no different at

This year, the company celebrates its 25th anniversary with a host of events planned. Soon, singer Josh Kelley will perform at a Kenneth Cole party in L.A., and later this year a book featuring interviews with people involved in a variety of social and political causes on the topic of volunteerism and giving back will be released.

This season, Kenneth Cole's menswear collection was designed in-house, with a solid selection of coats (wool, bomber, puffer), some with interesting details like sculpted elbow guard-like panel pieces, as well as casual-meets-dressy denim flat-front trousers, and a host of leather satchels and briefcases for which Cole is a particular favorite.

For women, chunky knits reigned supreme, especially wraps and bat-wing-sleeved sweaters, to be layered over silk shells in a vibrant color. Jacket sleeves took a rounded, seamless approach to achieve a sculptured shoulder effect. In shoes, high-heeled booties are still going strong for fall '08, with versions in fuchsia or raspberry. Color-block pumps with patent leather toes and heels also looked chic.

In both the men's and women's collections, shades of lipstick red, raspberry and midnight blue added a touch of cool color to an otherwise functional-in-the-concrete-jungle palette of gray and black.

But the real story for Kenneth Cole is not so much the fashion, but his concern with the bigger issues facing humanity today. Cole, who is known for his catchy, sloganeering ad campaigns that often shed light on social causes, has made social awareness a primary objective over the years. He's the chairman of AmFar and also supports Help USA, a non-profit organization that aids the homeless.

At fashion week, for example, Cole opted not to show his collection on the runway, but the brand's presence was still felt on Super Tuesday, when the company conducted a poll of various fashion week attendees on topics related to politics and the environment. The company then published the results on its newly launched blog, "Awareness."

The real story for Kenneth Cole is ... his concern with the bigger issues facing humanity.

Kenneth Cole's "Awareness" campaign ("To be aware is more important than what you wear," reads the Kenneth Cole slogan on the company's Web site) was started last summer to encompass all the charitable work of the company, and each season a new group of T-shirts is released with a portion of the proceeds from sales going toward the Awareness Fund. Everything from AIDS, to global warming, to same-sex marriage is addressed in the designs.

Low-Tech Time Travel

AVEENO POSITIVELY AGELESS LIFTING AND FIRMING NIGHT CREAM ($20, drugstores) is good if you just want a nice, substantial moisture-goop without patent-pending bio-beta-complex nanobot time-release micro-ampules. You slather it on. It smells lightly floral. You sleep. Your skin feels moist. Firm? Not so much. Our skin felt about as slack and/or taut as usual. But the product is so blessedly free of high-tech affectation, it doesn't matter. It has a 1950s sitcom vibe, a sense of wholesome simplicity. However, it is made with 'shrooms, which seems more 1960s. But they're shiitake mushrooms, which is very 1990s fusion cuisine. It really is positively ageless!

The spicy-smelling AVEDA MEN PURE-FORMANCE EXFOLIATING SHAMPOO ($24, Aveda.com) claims to be a veritable full spa treatment for the male head. Then it soothes the skin it just scrubbed the bejesus out of with some other food-related ingredients, like licorice extract. Our victim, who has very thick hair, couldn't figure out how to tell whether it worked, speculating that perhaps you need a crew cut or a bald spot to feel the full effect. And to wash it out effectively,—he had to rinse for longer than usual to get the grains out.

The TV Column

Post TV columnist LISA DE MORAES was online Friday and expressed her dislike for "American Idol's" new audience "Wave," speculated about a "24" TV movie and ragged on "CSI's" David Caruso.

What do you think prevents Simon from playing whack-a-mole on the swaying/clapping arms in front of him? It's the most irritating addition to this season, even more than the ask-a-Coke question.

You are so right! I resent having my view of the performing "Idollette" obscured by the Waving Arms of the Mosh Pit Chicks. And when they're not doing the Wave, they're doing the Wave Clap. Why can't they clap with their hands at waist level like the rest of us?

A "24" made-for-TV movie: Would it forgo the (supposed) real-time element, or would it just take us through two hours of Jack Bauer's life? Maybe while he sits through a long CTU staff meeting and fiddles with his BlackBerry?

I like your thinking, but I think it's going to take liberties with the "real time" thing.

I think what's incredible about David Caruso ("CSI: Miami") is how he's able to turn every statement into a question. "It's ... cold outside?" With all the squinting and whispering, do you think Chad Michael Murray watches Caruso and feels like he's looking into the future?

I think we should all pick one day and make it our David Caruso day, and everything we say will be turned into a question and we will wear dark glasses and keep our hands planted firmly on our hips and cock our head to one side. It could become a national holiday, David Caruso Day, like Groundhog Day.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Are you truly equipped for what lies ahead, or are you merely being cocky and overconfident? Take heed; be carefully prepared.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Now is the time to dedicate your efforts to a cause that quite simply cannot move forward without your help. Be generous with time and energy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Don't overcompensate for a perceived weakness. The fact is that you're in better shape now than you might suppose.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) There may be only so much you can do to prepare for what lies in store, but if you trust your instincts and experience, you should prevail.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You can easily put your best foot forward—and this is the time to do it, as certain powerful people may have their eyes on you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You'll receive a sign of sorts that leads you in an unusual direction before the day is out. It may be that you're looking for a change of pace.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Ask the right people for help and you'll come out looking better than expected when all is said and done. Be bold; have a good time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) Even the tiniest error can cost you much at this time. Remain firmly in control, and don't give in to temptation.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Someone is likely to intrude in some way, but you'll find a way to focus on essential issues regardless—without being rude.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may be thrilled to discover just how much someone you respect respects you in return. This may be the beginning of a valuable partnership.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) You may have to take time out to focus on certain peripheral issues that, for the time being, are becoming more and more essential.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) A surprise call or announcement late in the day is likely to have you scurrying about making sure that everything is in its place.

Rep. Wynn's Decision Costly

CONGRESSMAN ALBERT R. WYNN'S announcement that he will leave Congress early ("Md. Rep. Wynn Says He'll Step Down in June," March 28) is a slap in the face to Maryland taxpayers. Wynn says his early departure will give Donna Edwards, who beat Wynn in a special election last month, a head start in Congress. What he fails to mention is that it also gives him a head start in the lucrative lobbying industry while sticking the tab for a special election on Maryland taxpayers. As Prince George's County struggles to fund its hospitals and schools, Marylanders should condemn Wynn for his selfish actions and urge Edwards not to participate in this terrible misuse of taxpayer dollars

Even Tone Loc Must Admit, 'That's a Pretty Good One'

TONE LOC plans to play shows at two bars in the Detroit area that were swindled by a man posing as the rapper's manager. Tone Loc will play at the Red Dog Saloon and at Bumpers. Red Dog owner Patty McMillan gave about $400 last summer to a man posing as Tone Loc's manager who promised his client would perform at her bar. The man also scammed Bumpers out of $1,000. The scam artist hasn't been caught. (AP)

"She knows Britney, [but] she doesn't really watch TV or read gossip stuff," the pop star said. "I think she sort of gets the drift of what's going on, and I think she feels very protective of Britney." (AP)

He's Single. Yay?

RIHANNA and CHRIS BROWN both walked the orange carpet at the Kids' Choice Awards. Separately. "We're not in a relationship or anything," Brown said before Saturday's slime-filled ceremony. Rumors have been swirling for weeks that the R&B singers are dating, but Brown, 18, was quick to squash such gossip. The "Kiss Kiss" crooner, clad in a custom-made orange hoodie emblazoned with a blingin' Nickelodeon logo, was named favorite male singer. (AP) in damage to the rear of the three-story stone home, has not been determined, Zurolo said.

About 50 firefighters battled the blaze for about 10 minutes before bringing it under control. No injuries were reported. The home is located on the western shore of the Chesapeake Bay. Clancy is the author of thrillers including "The Hunt for Red October," "Patriot Games," and "Clear and Present Danger." (AP)

'Remy Ma Is My Only Hero'

Grammy-nominated rapper REMY MA hopes her fan base will count in the courtroom when she is to be sentenced for shooting a woman outside a nightclub. A statement posted on Remy Ma's MySpace page asks visitors to write letters about how the rapper and her music have "positively affected you, influenced you, inspired you, etc. ... in hopes that the judge will be lenient." It provides a special e-mail address for anyone inclined to do so. Remy Ma is being held without bail until her sentencing, set for April 23. She faces up to 25 years in prison. (AP)

Miley Cyrus Acts Her Age; Akon and Heidi Klum Don't

It was the best of both worlds at Saturday's Kids Choice Awards for MILEY CYRUS, who took home trophies for favorite female singer and TV actress and rocked the show with a spirited performance of her hit song, "GNO — Girls Night Out." It was also a slime spectacle — AKON crashed a dune buggy into giant containers of Nickelodeon's trademark green slime, and HEIDI KLUM, attached to a bungee cord and wearing a "butt spike belt," flung herself into a wall covered with slime-filled balloons. Finally, Miley Cyrus is where she belongs: at the Kids Choice Awards.
